

Abena Akuffo-Kelly is a teacher, union activist, mentor and coach. She is a Lead Facilitator with the NCCE (National Centre for Computing Education) where she helps to enhance teacher subject knowledge by training non-specialist teachers to teach computer science. She is also an Enthuse Partnership Coach supporting schools to raise aspirations and engagement in STEM subjects. She is an Educational Consultant with the DfE funded Inclusion in science project where she helps schools and colleges to transform and diversify their provision and practice in regards to the protected characteristics and careers.

She is a trainer for LWN – Labour Womens network where she seeks to empower women to find their political voice and to participate in the political discourse by becoming councillor and MPs. She also runs a CIC that seeks to enhance community cohesion whilst also reducing waste and helping the environment by providing free repair services for the community.

She is also a local councillor at both town and District level as well as being Mayor of Folkestone and former Chair of Folkestone and Hythe District Council. She speaks and trains on race and ethnicity, gender, LGBT rights and neurodiversity. Her main passion is ensuring that intersectionality is considered in every discourse and has contributed to a book on diversity and inclusion in education to share her ideas.